Would you rather...

High school is hard enough with the many choices that students must make daily. See how students respond when things get even tougher and they are asked some challenging questions.

After high school, would you rather have a job you hate for 10 years and then retire comfortably or a job you love but work the rest of your life?

"If I had a job I really loved, I would want to work the rest of my life anyway. I usually have more fun doing what I love than having some time off."
Gavin Sears, '20

"A job I love. If I enjoy what I'm doing, the work wouldn't come as much of a struggle or effort and I wouldn't want to waste my life for 10 years."
Malinali Sanchez, '22

"I would rather have a job I hate for ten years because then I would be able to just enjoy life."
Jacob Bandy, '19

"A job I love because, in life, one needs purpose. If I'm working at a job I hate then I won't be striving toward my purpose."
Evin Ersan, '20

Would you rather ban homework or tests in high school?

"Tests because in some cases they don't show an accurate representation of how well you know a subject."
David Scranton, '22

"Homework because it has become busy work. Tests are good checkpoints and students do enough in class."
Delaney Evans, '20

"I would rather ban tests because they add extra stress in addition to going to school."
Morgan Sorenson, '21

"Homework; I learn much more hands on and have more fun doing work with friends. Tests help us go over everything."
Malia Pavey, '22

Emad Haque '21 is friends with Alexander Xiao '21.

Alexander Xiao '21 is friends with Mukul Kulkarni '22.
