Best Excuse for a Student Not Doing Their Homework

Mary Wegmann
 "I had the assignment done, but we have a new puppy who isn't trained yet. He peed on it."
 • Teacher Mary Wegmann

Kathy Naughton
 "I left it in my dad's truck, and he's somewhere in Nebraska."
 • Teacher Kathy Naughton

Corey Coates
 "I had a student send an e-mail from home saying that the internet and Wi-Fi were down and they would not be able to complete the work. Hmm... how did that e-mail come through?"
 • Teacher Corey Coates

Stephanie Stocks
 "I had a student who couldn't return their library book because they left it on the airplane over winter break. They contacted the airline, but the book was never returned."
 • Librarian Stephanie Stocks

You Have to Read This Book!

In teacher Abby Osborne's classes, she encourages her students to read books, lots of books. She tells her students about books on a regular basis and conferences with her students while they read to learn what they like and how their reading skills are developing. Osborne's and Jamie Smith's English III classes competed by posting the number of pages read each week on their classroom doors.

"Our students really enjoy free reading," Osborne said. "We are trying to build reading communities, and with that has come improved vocabulary."

Abby Osborne displays the number of pages each of her classes read per week on her door. One week, one of her classes read 3,500 pages.
