We had our Golden Moments. For teacher Heath Pattschull it was this: "I think it was when the students realized what the purpose of the play, 'Moon Boy' was and it changed how they looked at themselves and the group, it's like they belonged in a different way, they had purpose in a different way. They believed in themselves. It was profound, it was so purposeful when students realized they were going to use the play to teach people about how they were able and how we can change our minds. It's just that momentum that is so wonderful that was my most significant moment when all of the Best Buddies and all of the students in my classes came together to spread the word that they were able people."
