@THEREALDONALDTRUMP

Something very different about our current presidency is the reliance Trump has with his Twitter account. The public does not wait to hear his latest interview on FOX or recent quotes in the New York Times article. Rather, we all tune in to President Trump's twitter page. With over 72 million followers, a large portion of the United States and world tune in to each of his tweets to find out what is happening in the White House.

No other president has made their social media presence as influential as Trump. It really does define the 21st century as one constantly revolving around our screens. Many of the most popular media outlets create their articles from the tweet notifications they receive. It feels like we are constantly being texted by our commander in chief from a group chat including the whole country. Many people love the inclusivity stemming from his twitter, while some think it makes the country seem improper and too open. Nevertheless, one thing we can all agree on is how social media has truly become a part of the American society.
