

Time outside of school was not wasted by students. Instead, it was a time for hobbies, sports, volunteer hours and so much more.

With his fellow peers in mind, Jacob Bange 23 and his family found a way to help his classmates in need of various household items. His family made a care closet at school for the students who do not have access to items such as deodorant, shampoo, toothbrushes and more. This was all possible through fund-raisers and the help of the school nurse and counselors who distributed items when students asked for assistance.

Another example of someone who volunteered her time for others was Megan Schulte 21. On breaks or days she was not dedicated to school, Schulte went to the elementary. While there, she helped her mom, a preschool teacher, care for the children.

However, not all students used their free time in the same way. Swim team at Jefferson High School in Cedar Rapids appealed to freshman Parker Gammill to join its team since no team existed at Benton. Gammill swam for four years before, which gave him the advantage when it came to the varsity spot on the team. The break of day practices before school were a difficult aspect, but it was all worth it.

Boy Scouts always interested Murphy Glawe 23, and he planned to become an Eagle Scout, the highest rank. He did this with several volunteer hours at local homeless shelters and numerous other activities. He attended a fishing trip with his group, and a trip to Washington DC is in the works.
