

best friends

◀ LAUREN SCHAFER '20 AND ASHA SANDHU '20

Even if you've been friends forever, it doesn't mean you have to be in constant communication. Shafer and Sandhu enjoy their alone time as much as their time spent together. "[Our friendship is] very low maintenance, but very rewarding," Shafer said. "We go through periods where we don't hang or do anything for awhile if we get busy or other things, but then when we come back, we're the same and it's great. We always know we'll be there for each other no matter what."

forever & ever

While some friendships have more of an opposites attract type mojo, Curtiss and Kuehn have quite a bit in common. "We like football, despite being incredibly unathletic, so we go to West and Iowa football games sometimes," Curtiss said. "We are both interested in engineering," Kuehn said. "We like Star Wars, and both of us have a horrifically unfunny sense of humor."

After meeting in first grade, these girls continue to notice they have a lot of things in common. "We have legit the same closet and will randomly wear the same shirt without planning it. We usually have the same length of hair and have donated it together once, but generally we will have it long or short at the same time. We also just have the same personality and say the same things at the same times. We are the same person," Barry said. "[We] also began dancing together then and still do now," Koch said.

Friends for life stick together. From dying hair, to late night walks, to Kum and Go trips, these two have stuck side by side. "In the middle of November, I dyed McKenna's hair purple, but when we were washing it out, we decided it would be a good idea to wash it out outside rather than in my sink. It was mid-November, so it was maybe 20 degrees outside. McKenna screamed like a baby," Hill said.

Some friends haven't been friends as long as others, but that doesn't mean they aren't the best of friends. "Our parents knew each other for a very long time and we didn't know until seventh grade. Then, we became friends from school, and when we hung out, we found out our parents were best friends," Bigley said.

▶ KEVIN LU '21 AND ANDY LU '21

Though these two may be cousins, they have also been friends for many years. "One of my most memorable moments with Kevin was when we were 10 years old and went to Niagara Falls," Andy said. They both have many similar interests, including soccer, music, and making or watching TikToks.
