Thomas Crane

Accompanied by his walker and bluetick coonhounds, Thomas Crane (10) has traveled to 15 states in the past year, in order to compete in coon hunting.

When competing, he uses trained dogs that change their bark once they have forced the raccoon up a tree.

He has earned many trophies and sponsorships and placed in the top 25 at the World Hunt. In the future, Crane hopes to win the World Hunt.

Numerous magazines and websites have recognized Crane for his accomplishments.

All of this comes at a price, though. He sacrifices sleep year round to hunt at night in preparation for competitions. On nights when he practices, he only rests for four or five hours.

Through coonhunting, he has gained a wise perspective: "You gotta be patient," Crane said.

He also values the time spent with his dad and seeing the dogs progress.

Kyle Barrett

Learning self defense and discipline since the age of 3, Kyle Barrett (10) has fought his way into the minority of teens with a third-degree black belt in taekwondo.

In addition to progressing personally, he has instructed students ranging from four-year-olds through adults.

Of his instructing experiences, Barrett says, "It taught me patience and that everyone has different learning styles."

Barrett has also learned and grown as a person. "I'm louder than I was before," he said. "I can actually speak in front of a large group of people because of it."

Additionally, he overcame facing taller and older competitors, due to his earlier-than-normal achievements.

Martial arts has helped Barrett through obstacles in his life. "It was a distraction from other people and things," he said.

Besides that, he hopes that it will help him get into college "since it shows commitment."
