Lee said if he could go to the Olympics for one sport, he would choose track. "Track, because I like racing and beating people."

With being so involved, he has to stay organized. "[It's] a lot of work, I have to stay focused on my plan for the day and when I get home, I plan what the next day is going to be like."

The pandemic put a wrench in activities this year, but Lee said he pushed through. "At first it was a lot of stress, but as the year progressed it's gotten easier and easier," he said.

Being so involved has to have a down side, and he points to lack of time for anything else.

"There's not a lot of time to spend time at home with my family," he said.

Although he said his family time struggles, the best part is pure fun. "I get to have a lot of fun experiences and create a bond with a lot of people."
