Holiday Assembly Takes a Turn

The traditional holiday assembly looked a little different than usual. Instead of participating in group activities in the auditorium, students played holiday games in their homerooms over Zoom.

Hallie Wenger (12) enjoyed the games. "I liked charades because that's one of my favorite games, and it was fun to play with my homeroom," Wenger said. "The assembly was definitely different than other years, but it was still a lot of fun being able to do some activities."

Aside from playing games, students enjoyed pre-recorded performances of holiday songs performed by their peers.

Kennedy Rees (12) performed "Christmas Makes Me Cry." Her song was pre-recorded and then played for homerooms during the assembly. "It was a little more comforting not having a full crowd watching you perform," Rees said. "But it was also kind of disappointing not being able to experience the audience cheering you on after you performed."

Decorative Doors

Kylie Kregel (11) and Aiden Lee (11) contribute to the design of teacher Tammy Phillips' door in the student council holiday door decorating contest.

Holiday Charades

During the virtual holiday assembly, Elizabeth Slepser (9) participates in charades.

Gift Wrapping

Competing to wrap the best present, Erin Wegmann (9) creatively wraps a present in 10 minutes in the gift wrapping contest.

Holiday Chords

Grace Johnson (12) performs virtually her first and last concert as a senior. "I was sad that the concert was virtual, but I am glad that they kept everyone safe, and we still had the opportunity," Johnson said. "That was actually my first concert playing the violin and I absolutely loved it."

Christmas Tree

During homeroom, Elias Tibbott (12), Carson Schnieders (12), and Nicholas Stocks (12) construct a Christmas tree on teacher Helen Temeyer's door to compete in the door decorating contest.
