

▲ Ms. Kristin Duning's freshmen class works on their final test for general science, reviewing topics they have been going over throughout the quarter.

Gabrielle Fiala, '15, cheers from the top of the pyramid that her fellow cheerleaders have established for her.

"Kylie McAllister and I have been together on poms since we were thirteen, so it's crazy to see how far we both have come in dance and realize that this is the end."
-Becca Hall, '15

▲ Carter Stigge and Jack Serbousek, both '15, embrace each other on their last night at the home football field, where they have been playing together since their freshmen year.

Senior Night
Mitchell Livingston, '15, carries his twin, Samantha Livingston, also '15, across the track alongside their father on senior night. The Livingston siblings have both been involved in cross country for two years together.

"I was glad to have my dad be able to walk with me, because he doesn't get to come to many of my events due to his long work hours." -Jenna Floyd, '15

Livingstons' last look

Twins Samantha and Mitchell Livingston have shared almost everything from the time that they were born. Now seniors in high school, that precedent has stayed true to their passion of running. Sam has been involved all of her high school career, but Mitchell joined cross country his junior year and has carried on to this year as well.

While most would think having a sibling in the same activity could be a little frustrating, Sam thoroughly enjoys her brother's presence, "Being in cross with Mitchell is fun, I love being able to go absolutely crazy when he runs past me in a meet while racing."

Perhaps what spurs on Sam's excitement for having her twin around is that connection they seem to have always had. "Although we don't hang out all the time or talk a lot, we've always had that special bond," Sam explained.

With her brother by her side, Sam has reached her goals for this last year of cross. "My final season has gone very well. I've beaten my personal record from past years so I'm really happy with what I've accomplished," Sam stated.

Though she has had a great experience this season, she is still sad to watch it go. "I'm also very sad to know it's my last 'cause cross country has been my heart through high school."

Senior night at the field was a great way for the Livingstons' to start to say goodbye to their lifestyle of running high school cross country. Mitchell gave Sam a piggyback ride across the track. "Walking across the track with my sister on my back made me realize just how much I'm going to miss her during college and how even though she's a minute older, she'll always be my baby sister," Mitchell added.

Even though their season is over, the Livingstons will continue to support each other in every aspect of their lives.

▲ The trombone section parades through the field during their halftime performance at the Indians' last home game of the 2014 season.

▲ Nick Kramer, '15, blocks an opponent of Dubuque. He has been on the football team since his freshmen year of high school.

◀ Ms. Kris Knepper's freshmen class of French 1A go over their homework from the previous night in hopes to review some of the material that will be incorporated in the last quiz of the term.

There were 21 seniors on the varsity football team, and six seniors on the varsity cheer team.

October 13-17

30 S. Guyer

"That was emotional." @Jack_Serbroski (Jack Serbousek, '15) 31