The March Through Marion

The heat is blaring down and the streets are coated with a slight shine proving that it had just stopped sprinkling. The line of cars and groups of people start to proceed down the street. As the Cabinet Creations truck starts to move, he starts walking with it, ready to represent his family business.

Dalton Gardner, Junior, and his family, were in the Swamp Fox Parade to bring customers into his dad's business. He walked along side the truck for his dad's business with a bucket of candy and pencils, tossing them out to the spectators along side the road. "I enjoyed the parade because there was a lot of people I knew that I got to see that I haven't seen in awhile," explains Gardner. He thinks it is important to help family, so he didn't mind being in the parade. He found it interesting the amount of people there, "I didn't think there would be that many!" With all the excitement of the Swamp Fox Parade, Gardner was right in the middle of all the action.

Gardner enjoyed being involved in his community and helping out his family's business.
