Six months after birth, Andy Meyer had a blood sample test that revealed he had a blood disorder known as hemophilia. It was a disorder that he inherited from his mother.

"Hemophilia is a bleeding disorder that causes the blood to take a long time to clot," Meyer said. "The reason being that there is a lack of clotting factor.'

Throughout his life, Meyer had to give up various things such as donating blood and plasma. Contact sports like football and wrestling were activities he did not participate in either. However, he still maintained a physical life.

"Although I couldn't get involved in some sports, I could still participate in basketball, baseball, golf and cross country," he said.

To be involved in these activities or others, Meyer had to give himself a replacement factor to help his blood clot.

Meyer said, "I used to have to give myself more infusions, but now I have to do them two times a week on average."

Although living with hemophilia has not been easy, Meyer has managed to live a pretty ordinary life.

He said, "I had a great group of friends throughout high school. They treated me no differently just because I had a disease."
