Unfamiliar Territory

[Students learn more about the play M.A.S.H.]

Students were unaware of what M.A.S.H. was all about when they were first introduced to it.

"I knew it was about a mobile army surgical unit, and that's about it besides that my mom used to watch it when she was younger," Paige Namanny 15 said.

Parents filled students in so students had a better understanding of the play and its message.

"My dad and I both watched M.A.S.H. as a kid, and sometimes we still watch it together now," Colin Hurley 17 said as he explained his recollection of the television show M.A.S.H.

Other students like Adrianna Whitley 16 almost did not participate because they had little to no knowledge about the production.

"I wasn't going to do M.A.S.H.," Adrianna said, "because I didn't know anything about it. Then Chase [Kusel 16], my best friend, asked me to do crew with him, so I told him I would so he wouldn't have to be alone."

When the students finally learned about what the play was about, the actors became anxious and were ready to begin the months of preparation and hard work.

"Once I realized what the whole play was about," Matthew Gerhold 15 said, "I became extremely eager to manipulate the character in the way that I thought the audience would appreciate and remember."
