Poster Pals. Poster making is a great way to advertise the yearbook. "Kelsey [Garin 14] and I were making posters to hang around the school to promote the book," Emily Skow 14 said. [photo] Caitlyn Conway

Giggle Monster. Kristin Jensen 14 has a close view of KCRG TV 9 News as they film Nathan Woeste 14 for Athlete of the Week. "I couldn't help but laugh when Scott Saville and Nathan had a blindfolded shoot-off." [photo] Kelsey Garin

Oceanfront Adventure. While along the shore of the Atlantic Ocean, Brooke Boddicker 15, Cassidy Nulty 16, Mataya Hammes 17 and Kelsey Garin 14 capture photos of seashells with their cell phones outside of Boston, Massachusetts. It was the first day in Boston for the JEA/NSPA convention, and everyone was exhausted, but Brooke had never seen the ocean before. Redmond said, "We decided we had to go to the nearest place to allow Brooke the amazing adventure of seeing the ocean. We took a 20 minute ride on the subway to Revere Beach. It was very much worth our time." [photo] Diane Redmond

Focus. On the sidelines Kristen Skow 17 captures a shot. "Getting to take pictures at football games has been my favorite part because there's always a big crowd cheering on our boys," Kristen said. [photo] Kelsey Garin

Awkwardness. "I was running to test out the light at the North Linn cross country meet," Morgan Johnson 15 said, "At some points it was embarrassing for me because competitors ran by me." [photo] Kristin Jensen

Yearbook Frustrations

"The biggest thing for me would be thinking of ideas for an article and putting it together."
-Sarah Cotton 16

"It is sometimes difficult making all the pictures fit and look right on the layout of my pages."
-Natalie Towe 16

"My frustrations happen when I go get a quote from someone and they don't know what to say."
-Ashley Masten 15

Proof Operator. Correcting proofs is a typical job for Miranda Hammes 14 during class time. "The process of correcting proofs can be tedious," she said. "It's easy to miss the simplest of mistakes." [photo] Kristen Skow

Lesson Learned

[Staff members experienced the unexpected]

Boston Transit. Cassidy Nulty 16 holds on while on the subway. "I was really tired from so much fun and seeing new things, but after the long day, my feet hurt," she said. [photo] Diane Redmond

Journalist in the Making. As Caitlyn Conway 14 interviews Garrett Werner 15, they laugh at a picture. "I love talking to people, so I enjoy getting quotes and seeing what people have to say," Caitlyn said. [photo] Kelsey Garin

"I had no idea they even charged for hotel phone calls made outside of the hotel," Brooke Boddicker 15 said. "We tried calling various places a couple nights to have some food delivered to us." On the trip to the national convention in Boston, three yearbook staff members along with Brooke: Mataya Hammes 17, Kelsey Garin 14 and Cassidy Nulty 16, learned that just because there was a phone in their room did not mean they could use it without a fee. Adviser Diane Redmond said, "I went to check us out and received a big surprise. First, the hotel charged us for wi-fi service for both rooms every day we were there. However, that came off, but then I discovered there were still 16 phone calls made with the hotel phone. My next thought was, 'Oh no, the girls are going to have to pay for this.'" It was not something Redmond had ever encountered before. She didn't realize that she needed to explain to the girls not to use the hotel phone. She said, "They [the students] had their own phones, so I didn't think that it'd be an issue." The girls never said a word about using the phone, so Redmond was caught off guard. "I was scared that she was going to find out about it and tell our parents," Cassidy Nulty 16 said. After Redmond's informative encounter with the front desk, she came back to the girls with a bill in hand that totaled $40. "I thought that we each had to pay $40," Mataya said, "but, luckily, that was the total amount for the bill."
