rant session

"One way to help control the overpopulation at East would be instead of letting them (the students) converse outside in the front, let them sit in the lunch room or hang out in the hallway," Gerald Sama/9 said.

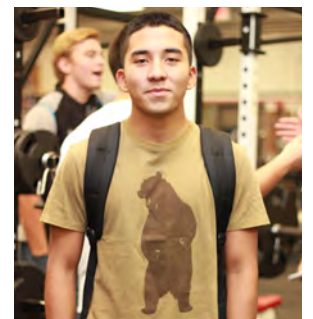

"It takes a while to actually leave the building because there are so many students trying to leave out of the same door, it gets pretty annoying. Although, a way to solve the crowdedness in the hallways would be to release each floor at a different time," Emely Zambrano/10 said.

"The good thing about having such a large population at East is the amazing school spirit. But, the bad thing is that it's hard to get to classes and lunch while still trying to see friends. We either need to have a longer passing time or move some classes back to Walker," Whitney Gualco/ 11 said.

"The pro of having such a big school with a wide range of population is the amount of exposure you get to other cultures and backgrounds. You learn to respect and appreciate cultures other than your own," Michael Toruno/12 said.

Trying to make his way out of school after the day is over, Manuel Cano/10 finds himself stuck amongst the large crowd of students that usually congest the main stairs and main lobby. With over 2,000 kids attending East, leaving after school, or even getting anywhere during passing time is often a challenge. "I find it very ridiculous that it's so hard to get anywhere in the school without having a crowd of people in your way. It's even so hard to leave after school because of the amount of traffic generated or the amount of people that are in the way," Angela Fredericksen/10 said.
